CINCINNATI NUMISMATICALLY

By H. A. Brand

The country situated between the Big and Little Miami Rivers and fronting on the Ohio River, had long been known to explorers as a region of great fertility and beauty. It was also a favorite country for the Indians since it lay along the route from the Great Lakes to the South. This route ran from Lake Erie up the Maumee River to the St. Marys River to a point south of St. Marys, where a six-mile portage was made to the Big Miami, thence to the Ohio and across to the Licking River and on South. The country was infested with Indians and any contemplated settlement needed the protection of a Fort.

An English Company explored this region in 1757 but took no action and then all settlements in the West were held up because of the Revolutionary War. In 1788, a representative from New Jersey, John Cleves Symmes, purchased from Congress the territory fronting the Ohio and situated between the two Miamis comprising six hundred thousand acres.

Symmes planned a great city at the location of the present Cleves, Ohio, near the mouth of the Big Miami River. Fort Miami was established and town lots were sold to incoming settlers. The balance of Cleves's purchase was sold as soon as it could be surveyed. A tract of 740 acres opposite the Licking was sold to Matthias Denman, also from New Jersey, for about \$500.00, or $62\frac{1}{2}\epsilon$ an acre. The Commander of Fort Miami found it necessary to move to Denman's location because of better military strategical reasons, but chiefly because a trapper with an interesting wife had moved from the settlement around Fort Miami to the country opposite the Licking. Col. Israel Ludlow laid out a village which was called Losantiville. Fort Washington was established here in 1789 and the new settlement of Losantiville flourished. "Losantiville" is a peculiar compound of Greek, Latin and French, intended to signify "The town opposite the mouth of the Licking River." On January 2, 1790, the name was changed to Cincinnati by General Arthur St. Clair.

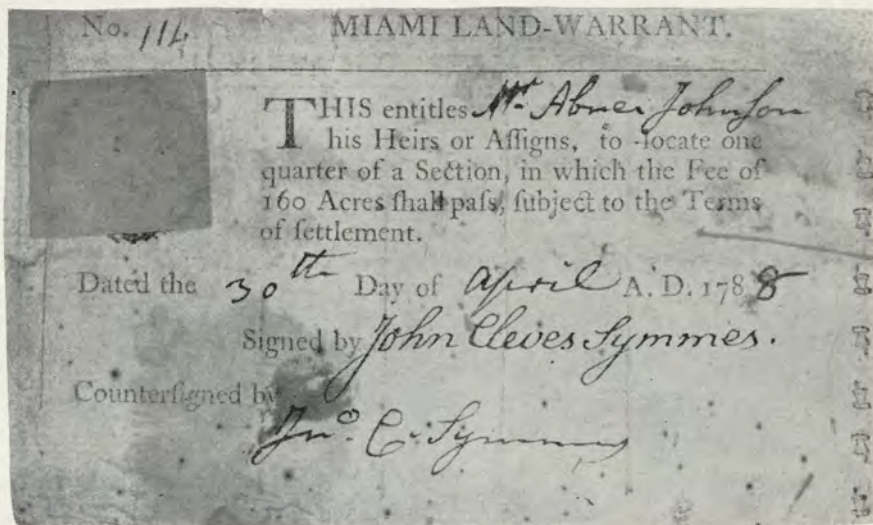

The early settlers brought with them very little money and it was soon gone. For many years the skins of animals were used for currency. A rabbit or squirrel skin was a five penny bit ($6\frac{1}{4}\epsilon$); a raccoon skin, an eleven penny bit ($12\frac{1}{2}\epsilon$); a fox skin, twenty-five cents; a deer skin, fifty cents. It was not unusual to see women bound on a shopping tour, riding into town on horseback with a bundle of pelts tied to their saddles, a basket of eggs or a bucket of butter to trade for store goods with John Bartel, the first merchant in the city. His store was located at the corner of Front and Broadway where the old Spencer House now stands. The old Spencer House, now a miserable tenement building, was in its day the finest hotel on the River.

The merchants used pins and needles for small change.

The next popular currency introduced into Cincinnati was the Spanish silver dollar which the government sent down to pay the troops at Fort Washington. These were cut into quarters and eighths for change and were called "sharp shins." It is reported that a smith cut some of the dollars into parts and for his pay divided them into five "quarters," keeping one for himself. Each passed for twenty-five cents for some time. Later these "quarters" came into the hands of Philadelphia merchants who passed them on to the mint to be recoined. The trick was soon discovered as they were twenty per cent short.

Next came the "Oblongs." These were three dollar notes of the Bank of the United States, made of that denomination to pay soldiers, as their salary was three dollars per month.

Possibly the first money produced in this settlement was the Miami Land Warrants, issued by John Cleves Symmes. These bits of money measuring 3 x 5, entitled the bearer to one quarter section of 160 acres in the Miami Purchase. They were signed by John Cleves Symmes and were accepted at face value in exchange for goods. The specimen in the author's collection is dated April 30, 1788, and is numbered 114 and endorsed as follows: "This warrant is paid for all to 25 Dollars and 60/90th in No. 113 of 160 including 8 Dol 3/90 paid in No. 346 of 640." May we therefore assume that such a warrant had a value of $25.00?

Another specimen is in the collection of the Chase National Bank of New York City, which was formerly the collection of Mr. Farran Zerbe, Past President of the American Numismatic Association and now Curator of the Chase National Bank collection. This specimen is slightly different. Description is as follows: "This entitles Jonathan Dayton, his heirs or assigns, to locate one Section, in which the fees of 640 acres shall pass, subject to the terms of settlement, #16. Dated the first day of May A.D. 1787. Signed by John Cleves Symmes." Mr. Zerbe believes these specimens to be the first form to have done service as paper money west of the Alleghenies and north of the Southern border States.

General Jonathan Dayton was also a prominent person associated with the development of the Miami country. He founded Dayton, Ohio.

The next earliest specimen of Cincinnati money is a piece in the collection of Waldo C. Moore, Banker, Numismatist and Poet, of Lewisburg, Ohio. Very little is known of the origin of this piece and any information will be appreciated. Its description is as follows: "There shall be paid to..... or bearer, five dollars and interest at the Territorial Treasury, N. W. the Ohio Andr. Death to counterfeit. Cincinnati 1-04-6 (Jan. 4, 1806)." Eagle and stars are in upper left corner. Written across the face is the following: "Redeemed 26 February 1806, Wm. McFarland." The signature and numbers were in ink which have faded out, though traces are to be seen. This piece comes from the E. B. Gortin collection of Denver, Colorado, and was sold by Henry Chapman in 1921. Mr. Chapman described it as extremely rare, probably unique.

The first bank opened in Cincinnati was in April, 1803, under the title of the Miami Exporting Co. It was established to facilitate trade and was capitalized at $500,000 under a charter of incorporation from the State of Ohio, which was admitted into the Union the previous year. The shares of this company were $100.00 each, payable $5.00 in cash and $45.00 in produce and merchandise acceptable to the Presidents and Directors. The remaining $50.00 was to be paid in produce the second year. The bank issued bills and redeemed them in notes of other banks for a period of about 40 years. It failed in 1842.

The establishment of this first bank in Cincinnati led other financiers, brokers, companies, corporations, firms and individuals to embark on similar ventures, and, in 1817, the United States Government opened a Branch Bank of the United States in Cincinnati.

From the best records that can be obtained and also from specimens of currency in the hands of collectors, the following list gives a description of the various issues of paper money in Cincinnati from 1803 to 1865.

Hard Times and Civil War Tokens

The Hard Times or Tradesmen's Tokens that were issued in Cincinnati prior to the issue during the Civil War, were as follows:

Dodd, Hatter, 144 Main St.
 Thaddeus Smith, Agent, 12 E. Fifth St.
 Erwin S. C., Hatter, 149 Main St.

The hoarding, resulting in the shortage of small change during the Civil War produced an avalanche of tradesmen's tokens throughout the North. Cincinnati, the birthplace of the idea, produced more than her share, as over 1500 varieties were issued by over 180 firms and individuals. As a full description of these can be found in a book entitled "Civil War Tokens" by Dr. Geo. Hetrick and Julius Gutttag, it will be unnecessary to describe these pieces in this brief paper. Six hundred varieties are in the author's collection, representing all but a few of the issuers.

Encased Postage Stamps

Encased Postage Stamps were issued by:

Ellis, McAlpin & Co., 3-5-10-12-24
 Hopkins, L. C., & Co., 1-3-5
 Pearce, Tolle & Holton, 1-3-5-10-12
 Shillito, John, & Co., 1-3-5-10-12

It is surprising that in this group, three department stores are represented and there was but one other department store in the country that issued encased stamps, Lord & Taylor of New York City.

Card Money

Among other resources devised was the issuance of "Card Money" or "Pasteboard promises to pay." They were various cent denominations, sizes, kinds and conditions from the denominations of a coal or milk ticket to that of a tradesman's business card. They were all conveniently small and printed on various colors of cardboard in many different colors of ink. A list of the issues of these in the author's collection are as follows:

 Passenger R. R. Co.

Street Car Checks were issued by:

College Hill Omnibus Lines
 Mill Creek Valley St. R. R.
 Passenger R. R. Co.
 Pendleton St. R. R.
 Sixth and Eighth St. Omnibus Lines

May we close by stating that no mention is made of the hundreds of saloon checks that were issued because of the little interest that is evidenced in them by collectors of today, but we believe these interesting items will be included in sales catalogues in the near future.

This article contains a complete list of all Cincinnati items so far as is known up to the present time. If there are any other varieties in the possession of collectors, or should any others be found, the author would be pleased to know of them.

COINS I MUST HAVE . . .

Without my coins
I am truly unhappy;
I love them so,
I take them about with me.

Somewhere to me
I aye have attached a face —
It matters nae
Whether it be make or mace.

On coins I'm bent.
If I to a picnic go
Quite gleefully
Do I my coin faces show.

An Historical Sketch of Cincinnati

By William J. Schultz

Cincinnati, in Hamilton County, Ohio, has passed through two eras, namely, the Ice Age and Prehistoric Age, and is now passing through the third era or Modern Age.

The First Era, the Ice Age or Glacial Period, created the great lake Ohio, which covered some 20,000 square miles of territory, and which was held in check by a glacial dam at Cincinnati. This dam was high enough to raise the level of the lake water five hundred fifty-three feet, this being the height of the south watershed.

The bottom of the river at Cincinnati is 447 feet above sea-level. Therefore, a dam 553 feet high would raise the water in its rear to a height of 1000 feet, which in turn would produce a narrow lake submerging the site of Pittsburgh, Pa., making slack water up the Monongahela River nearly to Grafton, W. Va., and up the Allegheny River to Oil City, Pa.

Prof. Wright, author of The Glacial Man in Ohio, Vol. 1, page 93, displays a splendid map of the Lake Ohio region and states that the palaeolithic man lived in Ohio, before the close of the glacial period some 8 to 10,000 years ago and before which time there was no Niagara Falls and no Lake Erie. A palaeolithic flint of the Mortillet collection No. 3.034 from Abbeville, France, where the geological conditions under which it was found are similar to those of the palaeolithic flints found at Madisonville and Loveland, Ohio, and also at Trenton, N. J. In Palaeolithic Man in Ohio, Vol. 3, page 365, is detailed the discovery of W. C. Mills, made in October, 1889, in the Tuscarawas Valley and which discovery is identical with that of Dr. Metz, in the little Miami Valley, at Madisonville, a suburb of Cincinnati.

The Second Era, Prehistoric. The waters of Lake Ohio broke through the dam at Cincinnati and rushed into the Gulf of Mexico, carving on its way innumerable new river ways. The Mound Builders then settled the Ohio Country and in the Cincinnati Valley, these to us still unknown peoples, built burial mounds for their dead and earthen-works for their defense. All of the mounds and fortifications located at Cincinnati were destroyed in the building up of the city and the artifacts composed of flint arrows for all purposes, tools for scraping hides, drills, beads of pearl, combs of shell, pipes and the like found their way into the Museums of our Colleges and Cities.

The ancient cemetery at Madisonville is noted for its singular ash-pits, at the bottom of which lined with leaf-mold was laid the mound builder's dead, and 700 of such pits gave up 1065 skeletons, 300 earthen vessels, implements of bone, horn, shell, copper and stone. It is supposed by Messrs. Squire and Davis, who explored many of these mounds, that southern Ohio was once the great center of the Mound Builders.

The Third or Modern Era. The first settlers arrived at the site of present Cincinnati, December, 1788. In the fall of 1789, General Harmar, commanding at Fort Harmar, situated at the mouth of the Muskingum River in Washington County, near Marietta, Ohio, ordered Major Doughty down the river with government troops to erect Fort Washington at Losantiville, now Cincinnati. Here then was located the most western outpost of the then United States. Generals Harmar and St. Clair made their headquarters at Fort Washington in their campaigns against the Indians. Likewise, General (Mad) Anthony Wayne used the fort preparatory to and while building Camp Washington, in the Mill

Creek Valley, from which he moved his troops, July 1794, to Greenville and upon the 20th day of August defeated and broke the Indian power forever at the battle of Fallen Timbers, a few miles above Toledo, Ohio.

Cincinnati in 1800

William Henry Harrison, a captain of the United States Army and later President of the United States, commanded Fort Washington in 1797 to 1798. Losantiville was renamed Cincinnati and was incorporated as a town, January 2, 1802. Population varied as follows: 1795—500; 1800—750; 1810—2,540. Two keel boats sailed from Cincinnati, January 11, 1794, to Pittsburgh, Pa., each making a trip once in four weeks, thus establishing the famed Ohio River traffic of later years.

The Civil War period made Cincinnati especially prominent for the eminent characters she supplied, namely, Hon. Salmon P. Chase, the great war secretary, and two Ohio's war governors, Dennison and Brough, also many distinguished war generals. Buchanan Read, artist, poet and author of "Sheridan's Ride," participated in the Siege of Cincinnati and Morgan's Raid. At the Burnet House was held the famous meeting of Generals U. S. Grant and W. T. Sherman, who here laid the plan to end the Civil War, namely Sherman's March through Georgia and to the Sea.

The topography and places of interest together with illustrations of Cincinnati, under the title "THE CINCINNATI CONVENTION OF THE A.N.A." may be found in the June, July and August, 1931, issues of the Numismatist and of which this paper is the end.
